POETICAL.

GOOD-BYE, PROUD WORLD.

Good-Bye, proud world! I'm going home:
Thou art not my friend; I am not thine;
Too long through weary crowds I roam—
A river ark on the ocean brine;
Too long I am tossed like the driven foam;
But now, proud world, I am going home:

Good-bye to Flattery's fawning face,
To Grandeur with his wild grimace;
To upstart Wealth's averted eye,
To supple office, low and high;
To crowded halls, to court and street,
To frozen hearts and hasting feet;
To those who go and those who come,
Good-bye, proud world, I'm going home.

I go to seek my own hearthstone,
Bosomed in yon green hills alone,
A secret lodge in a pleasant land,
Whose groves the frolic fairies planned,
Where arches green the livelong day
Echo the blackbird's roundelay,
And evil men have never trod
A spot that is sacred to thought and God.

Oh, when I am safe in my sylvan home,
I mock at the pride of Greece and Rome;
And when I am stretched beneath the pines,
Where the evening star so holy shines,
I laugh at the lore and pride of man,
At the sophist schools, and the learned clan;
For what are they all in their high conceit,
When man in the bush with God may meet?

SELECT STORY.

THE OLD WELL.

BY CLYDE RAYMOND.

"So you want to know if I ever had a romance?" said Aunt Margaret, leaning back in her easy chair, with a mild, reflective look upon her peaceful face. "Yes, something did happen to me once that may seem like one to you, although I never thought of calling it by that name."

"Let's hear it, auntie, please," I answered, pushing the velvet hassock nearer to her, and giving an extra shake to the bright coal fire.

The night was somewhat cold and blustering outside, but that only made Aunt Margaret's room, with its warm-hued furniture, its softly-cushioned easy chairs, its glowing fire and shaded astral lamp, look all the more inviting.

She was a distant relative who had come to pay us a long promised visit, and from my first glance at her fine, stately figure and her noble, placid countenance, knowing that she had never married, I got the notion into my head that she must have had a romance. Her hair was still brown and abundant, while her eyes shone clear and blue as a young girl's. And yet Aunt Margaret was well past fifty.

"Well, my dear," she began, smiling softly, "'once upon a time,' as the story books say, I was young, and considered rather pretty——"

"Oh, no need to tell me that, Aunt Margaret," I interrupted, gazing with unfeigned admiration at the handsome face into which a delicate rose-color came so brightly at the memory of her girlish loveliness. "You might easily carry off the palm of beauty from us now, if you felt so inclined."

She smiled again as she saw how sincere was my tribute to her charms, and resumed her story:

"I had of course my share of admirers among the village youth, and was a great favorite at balls, quilting parties, husking bees, and all the other entertainments of village society; yet I reached the age of 20 heart whole and fancy-free, still keeping house for my widowed father, as I had done almost from childhood, and never caring to make any change.

"Because the right one hadn't come along, Auntie," I said, eagerly, thinking of my "bonnie Charlie," with his curly locks and lightsome heart, and wondering how girls in any age of the world could have loved, married and lived happily without ever having known the sunlight of his presence.

"Well, Madge, he came at last," continued Aunt Margaret, with a gentle sigh which seemed to waft her far back into the happy past, "and the manner of his coming was one that I can never forget. Our house stood at one end of the street, and in a far corner of the lot stood an old well, neglected and unused for years, save by us silly girls, who found it a romantic spot to try our fortunes by on Hallowe'en. But it was very dangerous, being unprotected by curb or fence, and standing as it did close to the public road. I had often begged my father to make it more secure, but he neglected it until my prophecy of danger from it was at last fulfilled.'

"One dark, starless evening in October, returning from a visit to a neighbor's, I was passing the old well, when suddenly a low groan of agony caught my ear. Instantly I realized the awful truth that some traveler had fallen into the dark and dangerous pit, and my heart stood still with horror. But only for a moment. I saw the need of instant action, and, leaning over the edge of the black, yawning hole, I called loudly to the person within not to despair, for I would soon bring him assistance.

"Then rushing to the house, and calling wildly at every step for help, I began an eager, trembling search for a rope, which I soon had knotted firmly around a stout, crooked old pear tree standing near the well. Then I called again to the poor, groaning victim below. I bade him grasp the rope tightly and let me pull him up. But it was no use. My only answer was another moan, so low and deep that I thought the poor wretch was dying.

"What to do I did not know. No help had come, and I feared to lose a moment by going after it. But I was young and strong and nerved with the courage of desperation, so I did not hesitate long. How I managed it successfully I never could tell, but I let myself down by the rope until I reached the bottom of that dark abyss and found the helpless being, whom Providence had sent me to rescue, too much injured to move a limb.

"As gently and quickly as I could, in that awful situation, I fastened the rope around his body and lifted him in a more convenient position to be drawn up; then hand over hand, like a sailor, and blistering the skin as I went, I slowly climbed to the top again, where I found my father and two or three anxious neighbors just begining to realize what had occurred. It was well they had come, for my girl's strength, try as I would, could never have drawn that large, strong man to the surface; nor could he have lived much longer in the deadly gases of the old well.

"He seemed more dead than living when he came up, and one arm was found to be broken. He proved to be a young merchant from a distant city, who had come to visit a friend in the village, and had met with his accident while walking from the station to his friend's house. But he was too badly hurt to be removed, and for weeks he was an inmate of our home, where almost the entire care of the invalid devolved upon myself.

"I need not give you the history of those weeks, Madge, but they were the sweetest I have ever known in my long life of half a century. Hugh Woodman was the hero I had dreamed of—handsome, noble looking, polished in manner and conversation. Better than all that, he was the soul of honor. Before soliciting my father's permission to offer me the life which he always declared I had saved, he told us frankly the story of his past.

"He was a young man then—only 27—yet he had already been married and divorced. His young wife had been unfaithful to him, and after bearing with her faults and the disgrace they brought upon his name as long as he could, they were legally separated, and the care of their only child was entrusted to him. This child—his little Lily—was a theme of which he never tired. Hour after hour he talked to me of her, praising her beauty and goodness, planning for her future with us, and begging me, a thousand times over, to love her for his sake.

"But he had no need to ask me that. Anything that belonged to him was dear to me. Even the faithless wife who bore his name was an object of interest to my mind, and many times I found myself pitying her for having cast aside the priceless blessing of Hugh's love. For I knew that his old love for her was dead and buried, and that the whole wealth of affection in his heart and soul was mine—mine.

Aunt Margaret paused, and the intense look which her blue eyes gathered in the memories of long ago gave her face, I fancied, the same expression which it must have worn in the love-days of her youth.

"Yes," she resumed, "our happiness was perfect—far too perfect to last. Our marriage was to take place on Christmas, and after a short wedding tour we were to settle down at once to housekeeping in the city. He had brought little Lily to see me, and she was to come to us for good the moment we returned from our tour. How I loved the child! not only for her father's sake, but for the innate loveliness of her own sweet, childish nature.

"She did not look like Hugh, therefore I knew that she must resemble her lost mother; and, if so, how beautiful that mother must have been! Lily was a blonde, as I was, but the fairness of my skin was snow white in hers, the blue of her eyes was more the intense brilliancy of the sapphire, and the blonde of her hair the shimmer of burnished gold. I can see Hugh now, as he stood with half tearful, half laughing eyes, watching me caress his darling child, and thinking to tease me by calling me the 'young stepmother.'

"The week before Christmas found us all as bright and happy as a prospective wedding party could ever be; but it brought a new actor upon the scene who was destined to change it all in the twinkling of an eye. Hugh's divorced wife, having in some way learned of his intended marriage, had made her way to our village, determined to win back to herself the husband whom she had deserted. Had she appealed to Hugh alone she could never have been successful, for she had utterly forfeited all claims to his love or confidence, and his heart was too entirely mine for her pleadings to have moved him. But finding him firm and unyielding, she sought me out."

"Oh, Aunt Margaret!" I interrupted in tearful amazement, "surely you did not voluntarily give up Hugh's love for the sake of that bad woman?"

"Yes, child, I did," she hastily answered, with a little choaking sound in her voice. "And you could not have believed her bad, Madge, had you seen her, as I did, imploring, with tears and sobs, to be restored to her husband and child. She was so lovely—oh! a thousand times lovelier than I ever was, though Hugh had always called me pretty. In those days, Madge, divorce was not so lightly thought of as it is now. A divorced wife, whether justly or not, was always regarded with suspicion, and the disgrace even attatched to her innocent children. I thought of dear Lily, whom I loved so well, and for the sake of her future I helped plead her mother's cause with Hugh.

"It was long before he would listen to either of us, but at last he left the decision of his fate to me. O, child, I never can forget the anguish that filled his loving eyes as he did so! 'My life is in your hands, Margaret,' he said, in his wife's presence; 'you saved it once, and it is yours, both by right and my own choice. Do with it as you will.' So, Madge, I decided against myself, and that is why you see me an old maid to-day."

"And they were married over again? How strange! But was she a good wife to Hugh after that, Aunt Margaret?" I asked, with a girlish curiosity, not thinking how my words might wound the noble heart, until I noticed the slight shudder with which she answered them.

"Yes, Madge, I heard of them years afterward, a happy and united family. I have always found strength to be thankful that I helped to reconcile them to each other. My life is flowing peacefully on to the great ocean of eternity, so I am content. But Hugh's last, loving kiss which he gave me so passionately beside the old well, where I risked my life to save his, has never been effaced by the touch of other lips."

Aunt Margaret's story was ended. She had never thought of this grand, unselfish act of her life in the light of a romance, but to me it seemed very much like one.

PROTECTION FROM MALARIA.

The preventive is the far-famed Southern remedy, Simmons Liver Regulator, a purely vegetable tonic, cathartic and alterative. It acts more promptly in curing all forms of malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use. Take the Regulator and it will keep your liver, bowels and kidneys in perfect order, and you will never have an experimental knowledge of the meaning of the word malaria.

A Dream of Murder.

The narrator said that, some years ago he was "best man" at the marriage of a friend who afterward proceeded with his bride to a large town in England. The lady posessed great personal charms, and had quite a following of suiters, the most conspicuous of whom was a young chemist, who did bear the most irreproachable of characters; but shortly before the marriage, this young man disappeared. The married couple were very happy for several months till an event happened which bears on the story. Returning from a concert one evening, the young wife received a slight chill which threatened to rest on the lungs, and medical assistance was procured. The doctor came, and after ordering a simple prescription, he retired, remarking that his patient would be all right in a day or two. This anticipation, however, was not fulfilled. To the great grief of the husband, his wife showed symptoms of extreme lassitude, and the most skillful diagonis of an eminent physician failed to account for the abnormal condition. Medicine was of course prescribed freely, but with no beneficial result. Exhaustion supervened; and at this crisis the husband telegraphed for his friend at Edinburg to come and perform some little business.

The summons was readily obeyed, as the friend had a sincere admiration for the husband, and the greatest respect for the suffering wife. Seated that night in a Midland carriage, with no companion but his thoughts, the young man recalled all the circumstances of the marriage, not forgetting the sinister incident of the disappointed apothecary's disappearance. As he thought on all these matters, he fell asleep. He awoke with a start, and he was at Carlisle. His sleep had not been refreshing, for it had been disturbed by a dream that troubled him. Unsentimental by nature, he tried to laugh the fancy away; but it refused to be exorcised. Still harping on some of the incidents, he reached his friend's home, and found the young wife in a hopeless condition. The husband was saddened and perplexed; and his friend, realizing that action of some kind was necessary to raise the mourner from his stupor, succeeded, in getting him to talk about the business he wished transacted. They went through a number of streets conversing familiarly, when all of a sudden the husband found himself grasped by the arm, and looked round to see his friend gazing eagerly into the window of a shop. Recovering himself in an instant, the visitor talked freely, and did not volunteer an explanation for his rather erratic conduct; but on returning to the house, he requested the servant to bring the bottle containing the medicine last given to the suffering woman. The girl brought the bottle, and said she had just washed it, as the doctor had ordered her to go for another dose.

This was disappointing, certainly. But the friend was a born detective, and not to be balked. The girl went for the medicine. When she returned with it, the young man took the bottle, and without acquainting the husband of his attention, left the house with the prescription, returning after a brief interval with the medicine. During the night, the breathing of the patient became easier, and when the doctor called the next day, he was able to report symptoms of recovery.

In the evening the friend, accompanied by a man of severe demeanor, entered the room where husband sat, and requested him to come out on a little piece of business. They walked in silence through several streets, and at last reached a police station, which they entered. Behind the desk there was seated a man with his face buried in his hands. The officer on duty, without much circumlocution, told the business which had called them there. Addressing the husband, he said that the man seated in the office was charged with administering noxious drugs. When the accused stood up, the party saw the altered features of the missing chemist. A light seemed to flash over the husband's face; and after he had made all the necessary dispositions, he hurried home. At the next assizes, the chemist was sentenced to ten years penal servitude; and as he pleaded guilty, the public knew nothing of the circumstances more than was contained in the charge. One of the prosecutors, however, had manifested a great interest in the case; and as the husband and his friend were leaving the court, he requested the latter to give him some explanation of the manner in which his suspicions were first called forth against the criminal. The friend at once told his story.

In the railway carriage he had dreamed that he was walking through a large city which he had never visited. At length he came upon a row of shops, and at a window of one of these he observed the face of a man, debased and vindictive in its expression, and quite familiar to him. The man held a mortar and pestle in his hands, and while he mixed up some drug, there was a baleful light in the fishy looking eyes. Then the sharp whistle of the engine awakened the dreamer. The sequel was plain. Walking with his friend through the labyrinth of streets, could he despise his sleeping fancy when he saw before him the actual row of shops, while at one of the windows stood a figure that haunted his memory like a nightmare? It was a perfect revelation. When he returned, and secured the medicine and prescription, he went to another chemist and procured the needed restorative, and then called upon an analyst with the first bottle. It was found to contain a deadly narcotic, and the police authorities having been satisfied with main facts, ordered the arrest of the jealous and wretched man, before the guilt of actual murder lay at his door.—Chamber's Journal.

VISIBLE IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. Noah Bates, Elmira, N. Y., writes: "About four years ago I had an attack of bilious fever, and never fully recovered. My digesive organs was weakened, and I would be completely prostrated for days. After using two bottles of your Burdock Blood Bitters the improvement was so visible that I was astonished. I can now, though 61 years of age, do a fair and reasonable day's work." Price $1,00.

The Supreme Court Shocked.

The Supreme Court of the United States is the embodiment of dignity and ponderous solemnity. The Justices are hedged about by bristling points of etiquette that protect them from ordinary people. Lately the Court observed with uneasiness the presence of a tall, angular individual, who slouched into the court room without collar or necktie. The absence of these usual adornments was made more conspicuous through the fact of his neck being very long and narrow.

Later in the day he was presented to the Supreme Court by Senator Plumb, and was duly admitted to practice as Mr. Lynn of Allen County, Kansas. The newly admitted Kansas lawyer appeared at his presentation still without collar or tie. It was announced that he would make an argument before the Court the next day in the case of the Phœnix Mutual Life Insurance Company vs. Caroline A. Dester et. al. A perplexing question at once arose in the minds of the Court. Possibly Lynn of Allen County, Kansas, might outrage the Court by leaving off his collar and tie when he came to make argument. If that was already reasonable certain, might he not take off his coat in the heat of his argument, and grow excited and yell his brief into the sensitive ears of the now deeply agitated Court? Justice Gray who had sternly refused a lawyer without a collar permission to make an argument in the Massachusetts court, where he formerly presided, was naturally consulted in this trying emergency. It was finally agreed that the Chief Justice should check Lynn of Allen County, Kansas, in his mad career, if he should persist in his outrage upon decorum.

Just before the case was called Lynn entered the court room accompanied by his partner. His partner, a dark, sallow-faced man, wore a collar about which a black tape was tied. After a hurried consultation it was resolved to first consult the partner who wore the one collar belonging to the firm before proceeding to extreme measures. The partner was mysteriously summoned to the clerk's office, where the matter was submitted to him by a subordinate of the court: "Why does your partner refrain from wearing a collar or tie? Has he taken any vow that compels him to assume such a peculiar attitude toward society?" It was explained to the partner that the Supreme Court was extremely doubtful of the propriety of permitting Lynn of Allen Couty to appear in the case until he had at least corrected the details of his garb. The partner explained that Lynn had a throat trouble, and could not wear a collar. "Oh, that is it." An explanation was made to the Chief Justice, and he smiled, glad to be rid of the disagreeable task of reprimanding the offender, and so Lynn was allowed to appear.

The appearance of Lynn before the bar of the Court made a sensation. His general appearance of roughness, his angularity of manner and reckless ease made every one expect some absurd contretemps. He was an object well worth a sketch as he began his argument. His high, white forehead was surmounted by a high peak of dark hair that curled backward. His sharp nose, heavy lips, and pointed brown goatee stood out in bold relief upon a countenance tanned by years of exposure to prairie winds and sun. His shirt was open at the throat, showing a red flannel undershirt. At the wrists the red flannel appeared again in the place of cuffs. The argument was clear, shrewd, and able, but the manner of its delivery was as uncouth and peculiar as the makeup of the speaker. He stood with his hands in his pockets at times, and then he would bound at the Justices, snapping his bony fingers in their faces as if they were so many jurymen. But the argument came to an end without accident, greatly to the relief of the Justices, who had been upon the rack of suspense for nearly twenty-four hours. Lynn is the first man who ever made an argument in the court without a collar.—Chicago Times.

Cave Of The Robbers.

Colonel James A. Alexander, the Gallatin banker and capitalist, rented his farm near this place five years ago to a fine looking farmer who gave his name as F. J. Howard. The farm was occupied by Howard until the day of the killing of Jesse James was reported, when the occupants disappeared, carrying away the household goods. The owner of the farm soon received a letter signed Frank James, alias F. J. Howard, stating that he had vacated the premises forever, adding "visit the cave on your farm and you will find something to interest you. I shall avage the death of my brother or die in the attempt."

The receipt for this letter greatly astonished Colonel Alexander, who called about him a select number of his friends to whom he read the documents and who were as equally astonished. Keeping the matter a secret they left the same evening for a visit to the cave, and entering the same with torches a strange, wierd sight met their view. First, the skeletons of four horses, evidently left there by the robbers on their last raid, as they still emit an unpleasant order. Blankets and mattresses were strewn about promiscuously, together with cooking utensils and a few pieces of furniture. This portion of the cave is perfectly dry and afforded a comfortable abode for the bandits.

In a niche in one of the chambers was found a half bushel measure, such as is used by farmers, and in it was found a miscellaneous assortment of valuables, evidently

THE COLUMBIAN.

G. E. ELWELL, J. K. BITTENBENDER, } Editors.

BLOOMSBURG, PA.

FRIDAY, MAY 26th, 1882.

Charles R. Buckalew will be a candidate for Congress in the eleventh district, and it will be an eternal disgrace to the people if they fail to elect him —Bellefonte Watchman.

President Garfield's grave, on every pleasant Sunday, is visited by thousands of quiet people. The sentinels still pace about the vault, the bronze doors of which are thrown back, revealing the coffin.

W. M. Monroe of Rupert, went to Philadelphia on Wednesday to attend the Independent Convention. Nobody can question Mr. Monroe's republicanism, but he, as well as many other men who have always been consistent and earnest members of that party, have had enough of bossism and the spoils system, and believe in reform this year. The machine leaders will be surprised at the size of the Independent vote in this county next fall.

Dr. Hocker, a Harrisburg physician, is in jail on a charge of attempting to produce an abortion on a Mrs. Berger, resulting in her death. The case was passed over lightly by the coroner and police, but the city editor of the Patriot got the District attorney interested and a post mortem examination was made showing that there had been a criminal attempt made. From the reports, the case seems to be very similar to one recently disposed of in this county.

The State convention of the National Greenback-labor party was held at Harrisburg last week Thursday. The attendance was small and the proceedings were attended with but little interest and no enthusiasm. After adopting the usual platform the following persons were placed in nomination. For Governor, Thomas A. Armstrong of Pittsburg, for Lieutenant Governor, Mayor Powderly of Scranton, for Supreme Judge, J. A. Cake, of Northumberland, for Secretary of Internal Affairs, J. L. Dewoody of Venango, for Congressman-at-large, R. R. Tomlinson of Bucks.

The Gazette & Bulletin wants Mitchell to resign from the United States Senate because he is not representing the party that elected him. That is true. Don Cameron was the party that elected him, under the misapprehension that he could control him. It looks now as though Pennsylvania has two senators instead of one, and because one of them denounces the corrupt methods of the other and leads an open revolt against bossism and the spoils system, the stalwart organs call for his resignation. After next fall's election it will appear which of the two senators represents the majority of the republican party.

In response to the unanimous request of the attorneys of the Twenty-sixth Judicial District Hon. Wm. Elwell has consented to become a candidate for re-election. It is probable that he will be elected without opposition. It is seldom that an officer so thoroughly merits the public confidence that is evidenced in this proceeding. He is a discreet, learned and honest Judge. Promotion could not bring him additional honor, but he would do great credit to the Supreme Bench, if the practice were to choose capable men instead of influential politicians.—Wilkes Barre Record.

The delegates to the Republican county convention last fall were mostly self appointed. The members of the standing committee were appointed by these delegates, and the representatives to the Cameron State convention were appointed by this committee. Machine made all the way through, in accordance with the methods of the party in every minority county. And yet the Republican, and all other Cameron organs, are endeavoring to convince the people that Beaver is the choice of the party for governor. The party at large had no say in the matter. Beaver was nominated by the Bosses.

Here at home, where General Beaver is best known, he will not be a strong and popular candidate, even if his connections with Cameron are forgotten. While he is a good citizen and a gentleman of good character, his dictatorial and overbearing manner towards all with whom he comes in contact and his abusive course towards those against whom he has been professionally engaged has made him many bitter enemies in his own party here, who will not or cannot be persuaded to vote for him. With the workingmen and farmers he is not at all popular, on account of his aristocratic tendencies, and among the soldiers even of his own good regiment, the One Hundred and Forty-eighth, he has fewer real friends than any officer connected with that organization. We state these facts not because he is the nominee of the Republican party, but because they are true.—Bellefonte Watchman.

The postmaster general has written an important letter to the house of representives recommending that all postage on newspapers and magazines—that is on all second class matter—be abolished. He shows very clearly that this can safely be done. The amount of postage received from this source last year was $1,399,048. It is now certain that there will be a surplus of $1,500,000 on the postal business of the present year. The cost of the Star route service has been reduced nearly two millions a year. It will be still further reduced. The postmaster general calls attention to the manifest injustice of carrying fourth class matter from New York to Arizona at rates which make it for the advantage of the small dealer on the frontier to have his wares sent by mail from eastern cities rather than by ordinary methods of transportion, while on other short routes the ordinary transportation methods are cheaper than the mail rates. Mr. Howe shows that under the law which allows newspapers to circulate free in the counties where published, only small part relatively of second class matter now pays postage, and it would be better to abolish the rate alto gather.

THE INDEPENDENTS.

The convention of Independent Republicans was held at Philadelphia on Wednesday. Senator Mitchell was chosen temporary chairman, and Henry L. Foster of Venango permanent chairman. The following ticket was nominated; for Governor, Senator John Stewart of Franklin, for Lieutenant Governor, Levi Bird Duff of Allegheny, for Secretary of Internal Affairs Geo. W. Merrick of Tioga, Supreme Judge, George Junkin of Philadelphia, Congressman-at-large, William McMichael of Philadelphia.

In response to calls Senator Stewart addressed the convention, accepting the nomination.

A resolution was inserted in the platform calling upon the legislature to submit to a popular vote the proposed amendment to the state constitution prohibiting the manufacture and the sale of intoxicating liquors within the commonwealth.

Resolutions authorizing the state committee to fill vacancies on the state ticket; constituting Mc Kee chairman and Leach secretary of the new state committee, and providing for representation according to the republican vote of the state, were adopted.

Colonel Duff then addressed the convention accepting the nomination. Chas. S Wolfe, ex-Senator Mapes and Major Merrick followed with brief speeches, after which the convention adjourned sine die.

MITCHELL ON STALWART BOSSISM.

A large mass meeting of Independent Republicans was held at Wellsboro, Tioga county, last Saturday, which was addressed by Senator Mitchell. His speech was received with every sign of approval and was a strong arraignment of machine methods After reviewing the rise of the Independent movement, he spoke of it and the regular ticket as follows:

This is not an effort to defeat any man or men, but candidates who represent autocratic power. The Cameron ticket did not go to the people for the offices, but every man from Beaver down went to the bosses except in the case of Marshall. In refering to the Senatorship, he read the protest of the "56." This defeated the ring nomination, and we stand in the same position. The Independents protested, but they were not heard, and we propose to make a ticket and fight the latter within the organization as now constituted. We have made every effort to get the two factions together at the Continental hotel and in the Conference. We demanded a class of nominees who, by their antecedents and character could not be representatives of Cameronism, and said if you name them we will ask the Independents to endorse them. We know how Don Cameron's ticket was made up, for I have the word of a man who was present that it was made at Washington last December. I was not wanted at that conference. (Laughter). You say if we fight we will bring the Democratic party into power. Suppose we do—can you make things worse in the State or nation? No—a thousand times no. I ask you, is democratic success worse than the triumph of stalwart bossism? I appeal to you—no, it is not. But in the end the Independents will triumph in the state and nation. The Independents are greatly pleased at the results of the meeting.

WORK FOR THE EDITORS.

The Editorial Association of this State will meet for its annual excursion the first week in June, and during the time they are together matters of interest to the fraternity will be discussed. There is one subject that should receive their attention, and upon which some definite and decided action should be taken. We refer to the growing impositions of advertising agencies. Hardly an exchange comes to us that does not contain numerous cuts and advertisements of patient medicines, while the reading matter in every column is interspersed with notices of the same character. From the propositions that are made to us, we judge that much of this matter does not pay one fourth of the regular advertising rates, and yet the agencies seem to have no difficulty in making their contracts at their ridiculously low rates, and keep one fourth of the amount from the poor editor to pay their "commission". The balance they offer to pay in printing material, or an advertisement in a Newspaper Directory for both of which, outrageous prices are asked.

When an editor declines a proposition from one of these agencies, because the price offered is too low, his right to do as he pleases is sure to be questioned, and the correspondence ends by the offer of a very little more, which is too often accepted by the editor.

A still greater nuisance is the traveling agent who makes cantracts with country newspapers. He wants a half column of advertisements, next to reading matter, and about twenty lines of reading notices, separate from any others, for which no credit will be allowed if not in position. For this, he may offer as high as ten dollars a year, and if pressed, may possibly come up to fifteen dollars, but he will not do this until he informs you that "he does not want to buy the whole office." Nine times out of ten, these agents represent such parties as Helmbold, Henry & Co., and others, who do not pay their bills. This sort of thing has been tolerated by the press for years, and it will continue until some active measures are taken to stop it. The remedy is not difficult. Let the editorial association agree upon a minimum price per inch for advertising offered by legitimate and responsible agencies, and insist upon a compliance with the terms. As for traveling agents make the terms invariably cash in advance, and we shall see fewer notices in exchanges to the effect that "So, and So & Co., are frauds; they do not pay the printer."

For our part we have adopted the following for the future: No foreign advertising will be received at rates that have been offered heretofore. No medical notices to go among pure reading matter will be taken at any price; they must go under Business notices. No advertising will be taken from traveling agents unless paid quarterly in advance first quarter to be paid before first insertion. We shall thus benefit our readers by driving out a class of advertisers that do not pay half what they ought to pay if at all, and benefit ourselves by securing better advertisers and better prices.

Joseph Lynn has sold the Mauch Chunk Democrat to H. E. Packer. R. M. Broadhead will be manager and publisher for the present. Mr. Lynn was an able editor, but was forced by failing health to engage in other business.

GUITEAU'S FATE SEALED.

The decision of the District Supreme Court has been rendered, overruling all of Guiteau's exceptions, and he will have to go. He will be taken to a solitary cell and placed under guard of a death watch. Only his spiritual advisers will be permitted to communicate with him, from this time forward until his body is delivered to the doctors. His brain will be examined by the most eminent medical experts in the country, and his body will be delivered to his relatives if they want it.

MARSHALL DECLINES.

Thomas M. Marshall who was nominated by the Cameron convention for Congressman-at-large, has declined to run, in a letter to Hon. Geo. Lear. As the convention adjourned without making any provision for such an emergency the leaders are in some doubt as to what course to pursue. Some claim that the ticket should be filled by the State committee, while others insist that another convention must be held. The declination of Marshall has added to the consternation of the Cameron clans. His nomination was one of the Boss's strokes of policy to make it appear outside that the convention contained an independent element, but it did not work. The day of reckoning is close at hand.

The Republicans in the House have determined to unseat Mr. Dibble, the Democratic member from the Second District of South Carolina. After inquiring into the facts, the Democrats became satisfied that gross perjury and forgery had been employed by the Republicans in obtaining evidence against Dibble; and for this reason they resolved to resort to all parliamentary expedients to defeat the Republican scheme.

After many days' notice the Republican Chairman of the Committee of Elections moved on Saturday to take up the Dibble case. The yeas and nays were called on this motion, the Democrats refused to vote, and the House was found without a quorum. Amid much confusion, the effort to get the case before the House was ried three times, but in each instance no quorum voted.

With a strange perversity of temper, the Republicans lay the blame for the want of a quorum upon the Democrats who refused to vote on this motion. The answer is obvious. A bare majority of one is a quorum of the House. The Republicans themselves have a good working majority, and can at any time make a quorum without Democratic aid if they will only attend to their business. The failure of the Republicans to get at the Dibble case, and carry out their plan for unseating him, was owing to the fact that thirty-five of their members were not present; and on scouring the Capitol and the city it was ascertained that they were nearly all absent from Washington. After abusing the Democrats for not coming to their rescue, the Republicans are now going to call home their wandering members and make another attempt to get rid of Dibble.—N. Y. Sun.

Why Beef is High.

A New York Commercial reporter has been interviewing some of the New York butchers concerning the high price of beef. One said:

"Last fall corn was 80 to 90 cents a bushel. Farmers in the West thought it was too dear to feed their cattle. Therefore they sold their cattle rather than feed them on anything but corn. Of course they sold the corn at a great profit. When corn is over 60 cents a bushel farmers can't afford to feed it to their cattle. Last fall there was any quantity of small two-year-old cattle in a thin or poor condition that were put upon the market. Then beef sold at 8 to 8½ cents a pound at wholesale. Now the same quality of beef costs 12 or 13 cents per pound. Beef won't be any cheaper until July. There are not many good cattle now in Chicago or Western markets. In July we shall begin to get Texas and Kentucky cattle; but this won't effect the prices of Western beef, be cause these cattle are not so good, being fed not on corn but grass. They get but little if any stall feed."

Another butcher said: "The prices of beef are higher than they have been for seven years. This is due to the scarcity of cattle. A good many have been shipped, too, since last fall. The demand is greater than the supply—that is the whole thing in a nutshell. Prices are from five to six cents higher than last fall. My books show that they are higher than at any time since 1875. An inferior quality of beef sells for more according to its value that beef at the best quality. We don't expect lower prices until July. The higher rates are no doubt due in part to speculation in corn and its advanced prices since last fall.

The Warren County Wonder.

The new oil well in Warren county, which is causing so much excitement, is about 24 miles east of Titusville, and a narrow gauge railroad is already talked of. On reaching the well, says a correspondent, the guards, who before would not allow one to approach the derrick, stand back and say no more. The boards which formerly kept the inside from view have been torn away.

Two lead pipes are connected with an 800 barrel tank, which stands under cover. The guards still keep watch over this, and allow no one to go in and guage. At the beginning of every flow a loud, rumbling sound can be heard, when suddenly the lead pipes begin to quiver and the oil rushes forth, amid a terrific pressure of gas. The flowing of the well and the rushing of the gas can be heard half a mile, sounding like blowing off steam in a boiler.

At the opening of this mystery the well flowed about every hour, but today she would flow for about seven minutes, and stand idle fifteen minutes. It has been rated by good authority, and those who have seen large wells, that she makes nearly twelve barrels at a flow. Finding that the well makes a flow every twenty-two minutes, it will score sixty-five every twenty-four hours, which at a twelve barrel rate would make a production of 780 barrels in the past twenty-four hours.

The pipe line has been completed, and the force pump was put in operation Friday afternoon last. The Union pipe line have men at work tending to the carrying away of the oil, the distance being so far to Clarendon, the place where the oil is pumped, they are unable to force it away as fast as was expected, but at the rate they are now pumping, 800 barrels can be forced daily. For fear that the well will gain upon them, two new tanks have been erected, in case they should be needed.

In conversation with one of the men at the well, he told us that great fear had been entertained lest the gas would catch fire. People approaching are warned at a distance to throw away their cigars, and be sure and not strike a match, endangering life and property. The day being very damp, the air was heavy, which held the gas near to the ground and the wind blowing in the direction of the boiler there was some fear of its igniting. The engine being kept in motion all the time, a number of pounds of steam are kept constantly on hand, so that at the time of every flow great care has to be given the boiler. Boards are put up in front of the fireplace to check all sparks.

The men employed here are obliged to go to Garfield for their meals. After a walk of about half a mile from the well, we arrive upon the top of the hill, where a stretch of 35 or 40 acres extends around. Here we are greeted by a large sign bearing the name of Garfield, named in honor of our deceased President. No better place could be chosen to locate a town. The place was formerly some farm, for on one side stands an orchard, where all kinds of fruit trees growing in this locality are found. Here is the locality chosen to erect a town, which will grow out of the mystery, "646." The place has been surveyed out into town lots, and at first were selling for $2 per foot, but at the present time it is impossible to obtain one in a good locality for less than $20. Buildings are going up on all sides, in the centre of the place.—Gazette & Bulletin.

One large wagon, to which sixteen horses were attached, was almost torn to pieces in an effort to drag it out of a mud hole.

According to Missouri newspapers, first class farm land may be had at that State at prices that will be more than paid by the first crop. Some of the figures given are interesting. John Vogel, a farmer of Grundy County, near the Iowa border, raises 200 bushels of beets on two acres, and sells them for $160. For this he can at any time get eight acres of choice land. W. I. Gilbreath of Marion County last year bought forty acres of prairie land for $600, and raised $800 worth of corn on it. In many localities good land may be had for $5 an acre. Nevertheless immigrants go in great numbers to Kansas, Nebraska, and other States and Territories. Missouri has not been advertised, and is little known to the newcomers from Europe.

Jumping From a Moving Train.

The supreme court has just passed upon a case of considerable interest to travelers who jump from moving trains. A passenger desired to get off at a certain station, but the train did not stop. He jumped, was thrown under the cars and had one of his feet crushed so badly that amputation was necessary. The passenger sued for damages, and the company defended on the ground of negligence. The plaintiff claimed that he had a right to infer, first, that the train would stop at the station; and, second, that it would not run at a rate of speed above that limited by law. If it had stopped, of course he would have sustained no injury. If it had observed the law in regard to speed, he would have been reasonably safe in jumping off, according to the testimony. The plaintiff in a case like this, naturally had the sympathy of the jury and the verdict was in his favor. The case was taken to the supreme court where the judgment was reversed and a new trial granted. The point of this case which most interests those who travel by rail is this: The jury found the plaintiff had not been negligent, and did not contribute to his own injury in jumping from the train. The supreme court says he was so negligent as to defeat his right to recover any damages whatever. The court held that the agents of the company were wrong in not stopping at the station, but for this inconvenience experienced by the plaintiff there was a legal remedy. The excitement and vexation of the plaintiff, on finding that he was being carried past his stopping place, did not justify his rushing into bodily danger. The negligence of the complaint deprived him of any legal redress, and the defense of the company was declared valid and sufficient, the injury having been caused by the unjustifiable conduct of the plaintiff.

Bloomsburg's old fogy Council has refused to form a contract with the Water Company for a supply of water in case of fire and as a consequence the town is again at the mercy of the fiery elements. Bloomsburg last year spent $595.50 on its fire department and intends to spend as much this year.—Montour American.

Your information is not correct. Our fire department is fully equipped, and will not require any outlay this year except for rent and repairs. It might be well, however, to invest a few dollars in buckets, as all the fire apparatus is rendered useless by the failure of the council and the water company to agree on terms for water for fire protection.

It will accommodate about 200 people, from the counties of Schuylkill, Northumberland, Columbia, Carbon and Dauphin. The canvass for the "History of Columbia County" is progressing satisfactorily, and it will be but a few weeks before a sufficient number of subscribers will be obtained to warrant us in commencing the work. As the cost of publication will be heavy, we shall not begin until at least four hundred names have been secured.

This book is a genuine history, upon which Col. J. G. Freeze has been engaged for some years, and as it is the first one that has ever been published that contains reliable information, it should be taken by every family in the county. We are aware that several pamphlets have been published that purported to contain a history of the several towns, but they were unreliable in their statements, and in fact were gotten up for advertising purposes and never intended to be of any use to anyone after the publishers got their money. If strangers to the county were able to secure in Bloomsburg alone, fifty-five subscribers to a so-called History, of about 200 pages, at $3.00 a copy, which possessed no merit whatever, and contained nothing to speak of but advertisements, we ought to be able to secure 1000 subscribers in the county to a book of 500 pages at $2.50. It will be ready for delivery by September. Orders should addressed to the COLUMBIAN, Bloomsburg, Pa. The price will be payable on delivery.

Duty of the Town Council.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE COLUMBIAN;

The Act of Assembly of 29 April 1874, provides that "the Court of Common Pleas of the proper county shall have jurisdiction and power, upon the bill or petition of any citizen using the gas or water of any said companies, to hear, inquire and determine as to the charges thereof for gas or water so furnished, and to decree that the said bill be dismissed, or that the charges shall be deceased, as to the said Court may seem just and equitable, and to enforce obedience to their decrees by the usual precept." Now is it not plain that the duty of the Town Council is to use the water of the Company for protection against fire; and if they believe the Company charges too much, to apply by petition to the Court to have the charges decreased? The Town Council have taken upon themselves the responsibility of depriving the town of protection against fire. In view of this fact in case of a Milton conflagration, would the people of the State or surrounding country come to our relief, as we went to the relief of Milton; or would they say it served us right? What object can animate the Town Council to take all this responsibility, and subject property owners to all this risk and loss, by increased insurance? It has been intimated that the object is selfish; that the President needs this question of charges for water in politics.

A History Worth Having.

The new and charmingly beautiful, as well as wonderfully cheap edition of "Green's Larger History of the English People" which is being published by The Useful Knowledge Publishing Co., New York, is most deservedly finding a place in thousands of home libraries. No history is better worthy of a place in even the smallest library, and, though formerly published by the Harper's at $20, it is now easily within the reach of any one, the prices varying in the several forms, from 65 cts. in one volume, octavo, Utility binding, to $2.35 in volumes Elzevir edition, half Russia binding. It also forms a part of the first volume of the Cyclopedia of History which is shortly to appear. These editions are for sale by enterprising booksellers, and club agents and canvassers are wanted everywhere by the publishers, to whom are offered very unusual inducements and facilities.

AGRICULTURAL.

Value of Corn Cobs.

Few farmers stop to consider how much of fertilizing matter is annually wasted about the farm, nor the expense incurred in purchasing the same materials in other forms. Thus in the apparently insignficant matter of corn cobs is an item worth saving. If the accumulation of corn cobs were gathered up and thrown into the hog pen, they would, by the next spring, be reduced to manure. It has been estimated in the corn cobs grown in the country last year were upwards of two hundred thousand pounds of potash. Where corn cobs are used in lighting fires at the farm house, the potash may be saved in the increased value of the ashes.

It is well known that the different varities of wood, when burned, yield varying proportions of potash. At the head of the list in the production of potash stands the willow; hence its ashes are of superior value in this respect, yet corn cobs contain double the amount of potash carried in the willow; so, in this manner, we may approximate the value of the ashes obtained in the burning of corn cobs, and preserve the same for future use in the fertilization of the soil of the farm.

Successful farming is cmmmonly the result of careful attention to little things, to the economical use of smallest element's of value. Hence, even the corn cobs, with their product of potash, are worthy the attention of the practical and thrifty farmer. The enormous cost the farmar of potash—whether in his barnyard manure, in his commercial fertilizers, or in his more direct purchase of potash in one form or another—renders the economical utilization of corn cobs a matter of some importance. It is but a few years since the most of our New England farmers thought that they could purchase Western corn cheaper than they could raise a superior article on their own farms; but when the proper methods of utilizing the fodder were understood, the advisability of growing their own corn became apparent. Again, as an additional argument in favor of corn raising, even though a small one, we have the fact that every bushel of corn cobs contains upwards of a pound of potash. And, in conclusion, if the growing of corn makes a draught upon the soil for the neccessary potash, how important that some method should be adopted, through a proper use of the corn cobs, to return this valuable element to the soil from whence it was dawn.—American Cultivator.

Raising Violets.

There is no more popular flower than the violet, and as it is one that can be enjoyed by all with very little labor, while the expense is not to be thought of, we are often surprised of its absence in many households. It is one of the earliest to bloom; in fact, it can be enjoyed almost throughout the entire year; and is so hardy that it requires very little protection. At most a cold frame, covered in winter with straw matting, which a bundle of straw will supply, will be sufficient to give us flowers in the latter part of March, when the plants, which have been increasing, should be partly removed and set in the open ground. A portion of these may be let remain out all winter, well covered with manure, to be uncovered early in March. It is also one of the prettiest and most welcome house flowers, being planted in a suitable wooden box and placed in a cool part of a room, and aired occasionly by being set in the sun at a window in the room, in which there is no fire, and allow the sash to be raised for an hour at miday when the weather is not too severe. There was very little intermission the past fall, winter, and this spring so far, in which we could not gather a little bunch of violets; and we should consider it a real deprivation to be without them.

Irrigating Strawberries.

Often when writing of strawberry-cuture we have remarked that nothing seemed to make strawberries swell rapidly, and produce a large crop of fine fruit, as two or three thorough soakings of water just when the fruit was about half grown. We suppose numberless persons who grow small quantities in gardens and can readily follow such advice as this, have profited by it in the past. These and others who have learned this little hint in strawberry-growing will be surprised to learn that it is rather a new idea; and it is said so much profit has been found in this watering of strawberry-plants about fruiting time, that large reservoirs to hold water enough to irrigate acres are likely to be considered essential parts of a well ordered strawberry patch.

One should think that in New Jersey, where marketmen generally grow their fruit in narrow beds, this idea of irrigating the beds about fruiting time would be found to pay well. Almost all fruit trees, about the time the fruit is swelling, require an enormous amount of moisture, as so much water is required to make up the juicy parts of plants. But most trees have some roots that go down some distance below the surface, where the moisture is more regular than near the top of the ground. The strawberry, in proportion to the total weight of the whole plant, has probably to collect more moisture for its fruit than almost any other plant; hence its roots, small and fibrous, do not go many inches below the surface, and are thus peculiarly sensitive to a lack of moisture in a dry time.

This hint it is well for those who cultivate the strawberry for domestic consumption to bear in mind. They will find, if these waterings are abundant and thorough—not mere sprinklings from the rose of a watering pot, but copiously from the spout, so as really to flood or overflow the bed—they will be repaid so liberally as to wonder that somebody had not told them about it before. It is true we and our correspondents have done so on several occasions; but where the strawberry crop is intermitted a season or two, as is the case for various reasons sometimes, it is forgotten and neglected.—Germantown Telegraph.

The days in which a crow can be destructive to the corn crop are but few, and all the rest of the year it is really the friend of the farmer. This black-coated bird is one of the greatest enemies to the "White Grub," the caterpillar or larva state of the "June-Bug" or "May Beetle," and for this service, if for none other, the crow should be spared, and even encouraged. A flock of crows upon a newly-plowed field will destroy vast numbers of white grubs and cutworms, enough to make a decided difference with the following crop of grain. In many cases the crow only pulls those spears of corn that are wilted, it thus securing the marander that has been at work below the surface of the ground.

Benson's Capcine Porous Plasters.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

Second.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

Third.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

Fourth.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Fifth.

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

Sixth.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.
